PROCEDURES

1. While recognizing that continuous and rapid changes in technology pose difficult challenges in technical assessments, DoD Components shall use all resources available to them to identify militarily critical technologies and monitor global technology developments. To meet these requirements, the ~~DDR&E~~ ASD(R&E) shall:

a. Update all sections of the MCTL at intervals no greater than 2 years.

(1) Establish Technology Working Groups (TWGs); provide oversight, in coordination with DoD Component POCs; and manage the MCTL update process.

(a) TWGs assess each technology, select those meeting the definition and criteria outlined in this Instruction, and produce the MCTL. Inputs for changes, revisions, or deletions are gleaned from diverse sources, including academia, industry, and other Government agencies, and are usually introduced by TWG members from organizations working on the leading edge of those technologies.

(b) The MCTL provides important information not only to export control decision makers, but also to intelligence, counterintelligence, and security personnel to support the development of program protection plans, the execution of protection and enforcement activities, and the communication of technology transfer decisions (see Figure 1).

(2) Provide and maintain MCTL Web sites that allow appropriate users to search for relevant information.

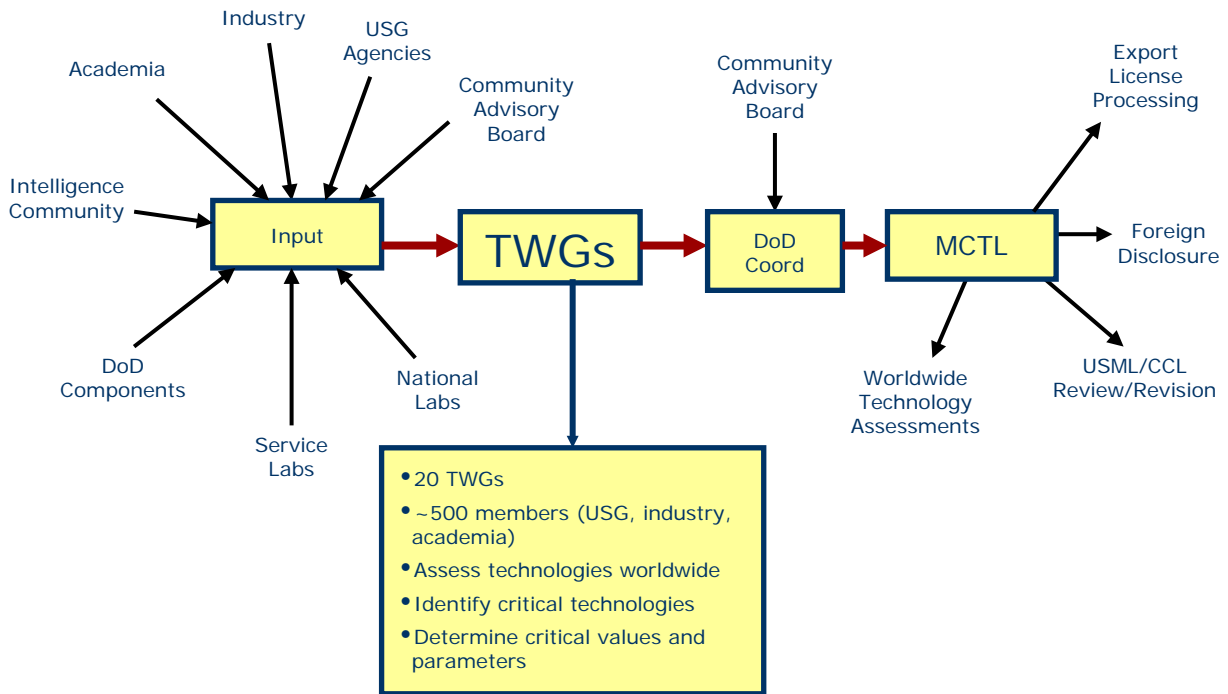

(3) Conduct periodic reviews with the Departments of State and Commerce to elicit feedback on the MCTL.

(4) Develop and publish technical addendums as necessary to the MCTL to include the identification and assessment of new technologies.

(5) Identify and assess current and developing technologies worldwide through outreach efforts as appropriate.

(6) Develop a methodology for determining whether a given technology is militarily critical. This methodology shall use objective criteria and produce logical and repeatable results.

2. The Heads of DoD Components within their respective authorities shall:

a. Provide coordination on MCTL changes and revisions via their designated POCs. (The Signature Control MCTL section is coordinated with the Director, SP.) The coordinated product is published on the Defense Technical Information Center Internet portal in two forms; a publicly releasable version (<http://www.dtic.mil/mctl/>) and a restricted access and distribution version (<http://www.dtic.mil/dtic/registration/>).

- b. Provide the ~~DDR&E~~ ASD(R&E) with recommendations, accompanied by appropriate justification, to add, modify, or remove items from the MCTL.
